

Changes to Census Product Data Collections Proposed for the 2007 Economic Census

Banking, Health Services and Retail Trade¹

Introduction

The addition of products identified and defined during the initial phases of development for the North American Product Classification System (NAPCS) for all service industries in the 2007 Economic Census represents a significant potential improvement to the quality and usefulness of input data for the national accounts. The development and implementation process, coordination with the Bureau of Economic Analysis and the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and consistent application of a product concept to the 2007 Economic Census survey forms for service industries all work toward better source data for users.

This summary provides a brief overview of the process used to decide what products would be added to survey forms and presents comparisons of the proposed product collections for Banking, Health Services, and Retail Trade in 2002 and 2007. A brief narrative describing the changes and a comparative listing of the 2002 lines and 2007 proposed lines is provided for each of the three subject matter areas.

Past Practices in the Economic Census and Lessons Learned²

In the 1997 and earlier Economic Censuses, service industries were queried about a variety of things under a general question regarding detail of sales, shipments, revenue, or receipts. In some cases, the inquiries were product based, while in other cases, the inquiries addressed non-product sources of revenue or even allocation information for institutional sectors. The questions had been developed over time to address particular needs but were not sufficiently homogeneous in concept. Often the concept on a single form was consistent but in some cases, concepts were blended within forms. For example, in 1997 legal services requested a breakdown of revenue based on the institutional sector of the client, architectural and engineering services requested product detail based on the service provided and the type of project, and commercial banking requested data on interest, fees, and gains (losses) for products such as loans, as well as products such as ATM services, loan servicing, and commissions for trading securities or selling insurance. In 2002, Health services questionnaires included minimal product detail (i.e., lab fees and patient care receipts) along with numerous inquiries about type of payer and resale of merchandise.

² Overview taken in part from Testing NAPCS Products in the 2002 Economic Census: Successes and Lessons Learned, John Murphy, 20th Session of the Voorburg Group, Turnover By Products – Accomplishments and Issues Session Helsinki, Finland, September 26-30, 2005

While these questions met certain needs of important data users, they did not present data consistently for comparisons across industries within sectors or across sectors. NAPCS was seen as one way to bring some consistency to the collection and presentation of detailed data for NAICS industries. A brief review of the primary principles of NAPCS product development illustrates the potential improvements. NAPCS is designed to identify and define the outputs of units classified in the NAICS industry classification system. NAPCS products are outputs that can be identified, measured, and priced. NAPCS product detail is developed based on the marketing and accounting practices and records available at businesses.

The initial testing of NAPCS products in the 2002 Economic Census included new or revised inquiries for over 86 service industries. As the NAPCS development continued, products for substantially all NAICS service industries were available for incorporation into the 2007 Economic Census. The 2002 Economic Census test demonstrated that service products can be collected broadly in large census type surveys. The process also offered some important lessons that, if addressed during implementation, would provide even greater success in future efforts. This summary briefly touches on the lessons learned and provides an overview of the outreach process and content adjustments that were made to more efficiently incorporate service products into the Economic Census and to improve the usefulness and usability of Census data for producer price indices and national accounts purposes.

The survey instruments for the Economic Census are developed beginning about three years before the Census is conducted. The process begins with the questionnaire used in the previous Census. The questionnaire is reviewed internally and then circulated to businesses, associations, academics, and other statistical agencies for comments and suggestions for change. Subject matter analysts evaluate requests for change and make modifications as needed. Considerations of time series, respondent burden, relative importance, and other issues are factored into the decision making process. The result is a questionnaire that is prepared for commercial printing and eventual mailing to reporting units. The content decisions for questionnaires must be completed approximately two years prior to mailing the survey.

In the 2002 Economic Census, NAPCS products were added to the questionnaires for 86 service industries in Sector 51, Information; Sector 52, Finance (except Insurance); Sector 54, Professional, Scientific and Technical Services; and Sector 56, Administrative and Support, Waste Management and Remediation Services. In total, over 1000 new or revised inquiries were added for those industries.

Improvements for the 2007 Economic Census³

The Service Sector Statistics Division (SSSD) at Census proposed a completely new review process for the implementation of NAPCS products in the 2007 Economic Census. The proposed changes targeted internal cooperation, external consultation, and improvements in the comparability and usefulness of data across programs and organizations in the U.S. statistical system. The entire process was designed to conceptually clarify inquiries and to balance the needs of various programs with the burden the programs place on respondents.

Some basic ground rules for product implementation were developed. First, the products would be included, to the extent possible, based on significance rather than the less clear designation of trilateral product status on the NAPCS lists. A target of 2% for detailed products was applied within a larger limit of two pages of product inquiries. This represented the proposed framework for product implementation in Service industries.

Due to the requirements of the generalized instrument design system (GIDS) used for automated forms design in the Economic Census, two levels of product data can be collected. The first level is the broad line and the second level is the detailed line. To ensure that the data was comparable between the Census and the Service Annual Survey (SAS), a general guideline that allowed broad lines to be aggregated to SAS publication levels was implemented. The process for 2007 started with the presentation of new NAPCS product lists to subject matter areas in the Census and Current Survey programs. The NAPCS product lists were discussed with classification and an initial proposal for a 2007 Economic Census survey form was prepared. Many of the industries where NAPCS was tested in 2002 were revised based on that experience. 375 NAICS industries in the service sector include product inquiries in the 2007 Economic Census.

The proposed Census questionnaires were next forwarded to BEA and BLS for review and comment. The intent of this process was to harmonize, to the extent possible, the data being collected on output, the price indices that would be used to deflate the output, and to ensure that additional data needed by the national accounts were also addressed. The service industries were broken into six groups, each with a three-month schedule from receipt of the NAPCS product list to final content decisions on the Census questionnaires.

The most significant external cooperation improvement was the active participation of BEA and BLS in the questionnaire design process. Proposed Census forms had always been circulated for comment but a formal process, with schedules, responsibilities, and written responses had never before been put in place.

³ Overview taken in part from Incorporating NAPCS Products in the 2007 Economic Census: Addressing Lessons Learned and Implementing a Coordinated Approach to Improving Economic Data, Mark Wallace and John Murphy, 20th Session of the Voorburg Group, Turnover By Products – Accomplishments and Issues Session Helsinki, Finland, September 26-30, 2005

The process had several interesting results that were not anticipated. First, various issues were raised as a result of the review process that were only tangentially related to NAPCS product implementation. In several cases, misunderstandings about the data content of past collections were resolved. In other cases, improvements in the special inquiries and expense categories resulted from the close cooperation and review. Overall, data collections will be improved in a variety of ways because of the closer cooperation.

The development of a set of practical guidelines for implementation of the NAPCS products on Census questionnaires represented an attempt to analyze the results of the NAPCS working groups within a data collection and respondent burden framework. The initial test in 2002 included all trilateral products and resulted in extremely long and burdensome questionnaires.

The process for including products on 2007 Economic Census forms addressed the mixture of concepts that had previously existed in the item for details of sales, shipments, revenue or receipts and focused that area on products only. Inquiries related to sources of revenue below the product level were moved to special inquiries and information regarding the institutional sector of the customer was addressed more completely in class of customer inquiries.

The choice of detail was based on past collection experience when possible. However, past results were also balanced with more detailed industry knowledge when making decisions. For example, economic conditions were not favorable for mergers and acquisitions in 2002, however the products related to providing mergers and acquisitions services could be substantially more important in 2007. Although size and relative importance were significant decision-making criteria for inclusion of products on the forms, they were by no means the exclusive criteria used.

BEA also requested broad coverage of products across industries. The NAPCS focus on identifying the outputs of units in NAICS industries supported that need. Products were identified on the NAPCS lists regardless of whether or not they were produced by other industries in greater quantities. There was very little focus on primary or secondary; rather the focus was on the products actually produced and reportable by respondents.

Ultimately, content decisions in the absence of collection experience were made based on the best judgment of Census Bureau analysts, the needs of BEA, and the price index collection experience of analysts at BLS. A future review of the results of the product collections in the 2007 Economic Census will hopefully show the strength of this approach.

Comparisons of the Proposed Product Collections for Selected Areas

The product lines development and forms design processes for the 2007 Economic Census are not yet complete. Each of the subject matter areas is at a different stage of the process based on their internal schedules and workloads. This presented challenges in compiling a consistent presentation for the comparative tables. While some areas are nearing completion and have assigned proposed line numbers for use in collection, editing, and imputation, others are still at the point of defining product lines by the more generic broad line (BL) or detailed line (DL) designations. Despite the effort to present the attached tables in a common way, there are minor differences. This was unavoidable because of the desire to present the most current information available.

All of the tables are arranged with the 2002 product lines on the left and the proposed 2007 product lines on the right. Using subjective criteria, comparisons were made to give a flavor of the changes. Products that were dropped between 2002 and 2007 are shaded in the 2002 product list while new products added are shaded on the 2007 product list. These comparisons should not be used for actual comparison of data that will be available once the process is complete. The tables are preliminary and subject to change. Still, the tables do provide a general overview of the types of changes that will be occurring in service product data collection for the 2007 Economic Census.

Summary

The development of service products in the North American Product Classification System (NAPCS) presents opportunities to improve data collection and knowledge of the services portion of the economy. The availability of products alone will not necessarily maximize the potential benefit.

A collaborative and cooperative process for including product inquiries on service industry survey forms for the 2007 Economic Census among the Census Bureau, the Bureau of Economic Analysis, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics should leverage the NAPCS work into real improvements in the quality and quantity of data used in the national accounts. The coordination of national accounts needs with comparable output and price index data for services is a major step forward. The potential for future harmonization of expense data collections with product output collections using a NAPCS system also provides the promise of better input data for national accounts.

While the process was not without disagreement, all three Agencies worked hard to minimize differences and meet critical data collection and data user constraints. The three examples presented in this overview are illustrative of the process that took place for all service industries within scope of the Economic Census for 2007. A complete list of NAPCS products and an overview of the NAPCS development process are available at <http://www.census.gov/eos/www/napcs/napcs.htm>.

Retail Trade

The data collected in the Economic Census for product lines is gross sales data on an accrual basis.

Additional inquiries for all establishments request information on the kind of retail business (or KB), on the class of customer, treatment of shipping and handling receipts, and other standard census questions for payroll, employment, e-commerce sales, etc.

The retail trade survey unit in the Economic Census is the establishment. Multiunit companies are instructed to complete a separate survey form for each location in the company. Historically, individual establishments of multiunit companies have not been able to report data concerning inventory, inventory changes, or cost of goods sold. Census collects this type of data in the annual retail trade survey where the sample unit is closer to the company level than the establishment level.

Retail trade product lines are the easiest to compare across the 2002 and 2007 Economic Censuses. NAPCS products have not yet been developed for retail trade so the existing lines from 2002 were retained with only a couple of minor changes. Product lines are common for the sector and are included on various industry specific forms based on the likelihood that an establishment in that industry will have significant revenues from that product line. In some cases, only the broad lines are included on forms where an aggregate is only expected to be significant. The detailed lines are included on all forms where those details are anticipated to be significant. In all cases, respondents are asked to write-in significant product lines that are not shown on the forms.

There were some minor collapses of product lines (pianos and organs were separate lines in 2002 but combined into a single line in 2007) and a couple of new lines were added to capture downloads of audio and video products. Deleted lines from 2002 and added lines for 2007 are shaded in the following presentation.

Health Care Services

Data collected by the Economic Census for health services product lines is gross receipts for services provided on an accrual basis.

In addition to receipts for services, hospitals and other types of health care facilities are asked to provide additional information on contributions, gifts, and grants from government and private sources; income from investments; and gains or losses from assets sold.

The health care survey unit in the Economic Census is the establishment. Multiunit companies are instructed to complete a separate survey form for each location in the company. Additional inquiries for the kind of health care practice, employment, payroll, and other general Economic Census questions are included in other portions of the survey form.

The product lines for health care services have been substantially expanded and clarified conceptually. In the 2002 Economic Census, there were three basic lines for most health care providers that requested data for laboratory fees paid by other health care providers; laboratory fees paid by individuals, insurers, or government programs; and patient care receipts, including professional fees.

For 2007, the Economic Census is attempting to collect patient care receipts by class of disease, based loosely on aggregations of the International Classification of Diseases (ICD9) from physicians, hospitals, and other outpatient care centers. ICD codes are required for reimbursement from most insurers and government programs so the information is anticipated to be available.

The Census Bureau also investigated collecting procedure breakdowns from physicians, hospitals, and other outpatient care centers. A matrix approach for collecting both procedure and disease category was reviewed as was the collection of procedure data without disease categories. A major concern in all cases was the availability of data from reporters and the increase in response burden that would result from the additional inquiries. Despite the policy implications with the ability to study both procedures and disease categories, concerns about respondent burden and the general requirement for approximately two pages of product questions precluded using both approaches for products. Consultation with the PPI program resulted in the decision to collect data on disease categories.

To meet the data needs of important users, special inquiries will be added to address the percentage breakdown by procedure type for each broad line. Inquiries outside of the product section will also request information about types of payer.

A dedicated list of dental procedures has been added to the questionnaire for dentists in 2007 with a high level split for visits and consultations, dental surgical procedures, and non-surgical services. A new questionnaire for ambulance services is being developed with all new product lines for the medical transportation services. Another new questionnaire is being developed for Other ambulatory care services with new product lines for the detailed services of blood banks, tissue banks, medical care management services, and other miscellaneous health care services. Home health care services will be collected based on procedures rather than disease categories because of data availability concerns. The detail of the revised health care services products lines is included in attachment 2.

The product comparison is formatted differently from the other product lists because of the current state of internal development. The common codes across the sector are not final resulting in a list of products reported by form number and level of detail (i.e., broad lines are identified as BL and detail lines are identified as DL). The deleted lines from 2002 and new lines for 2007 are highlighted in the following presentation.

Banking

Data collected for banking products in the Economic Census is based on income from products, fees or commissions for services performed, and net gains or losses from own account investment activities.

The survey unit for banking is defined as an alternative reporting unit in the Economic Census. Rather than attempting to collect data at the establishment or bank branch level, a more aggregated unit (the alternative reporting unit) is used to collect product information at the company or division level. Separate data is requested at the establishment level for employment and payroll but past collection experience demonstrated that individual branches did not have the information necessary to report on products such as income from loans, credit card product income, foreign currency transactions, and similar products normally consolidated across the branches.

The 2002 product collections, while based on NAPCS, still included a number of lines for revenue streams that were components of products rather than actual products (e.g., interest from consumer loans, origination fees for consumer loans, and other fees for consumer loans). There was still a mixture of concepts used in order to address the data user needs.

The product detail collected in the 2007 Economic Census will be conceptually similar to the products included in the 2002 Economic Census during the initial test of NAPCS feasibility. However, while products were quantifiable based on the individual sources of revenue related to them in 2002, the income for these products will be collected directly in 2007.

In the initial test of NAPCS finance products the survey form for banking included a broad range of product lines. Quantitative analysis of the results provided fertile ground to reduce details and thereby reduce respondent burden without losing important data for price statisticians or national accountants. Analysis of the results allowed the lines to be tailored to the actual products being provided by banks. This resulted in lines that had insignificantly small or no production (such as securities origination products) to be removed and aggregates included where reporting on detailed lines indicated that the aggregate would be sufficient.

In order to maintain important information that is not product data, separate special inquiries such as requesting the percentage breakout of revenue streams by type of product (e.g., % of loan income from interest, % of loan income from origination fees, and % of loan income from other fees) are asked of respondents. These and other special inquiries are included in other areas of the survey form. An example of the draft special inquiry for streams of revenue associated with loans is:

Percentage of loan income from:

Loan Type	Interest	Origination Fees	Other Fees	Total
1. Loans to businesses and government	_____ %	_____ %	_____ %	100%
2. Residential Mortgages and home equity	_____ %	_____ %	_____ %	100%
3. Consumer vehicle and other secured loans	_____ %	_____ %	_____ %	100%
4. Unsecured consumer loans	_____ %	_____ %	_____ %	100%

Similar special inquiries will be prepared for credit card products, brokering and dealing products, and other finance products.

Overall, the goal was to reduce respondent burden while maintaining critical data. There were extensive discussions with BEA and BLS over a six-month period to ensure that a balance between respondent burden, required data, and a more consistent product approach were incorporated in the forms.

The result of these discussions is a smaller list of product lines that address actual products with special inquiries and other inquiries addressing the percentage breakouts for components such as interest, origination fees, and other fees. This process was detailed extensively in two papers presented at the Voorburg Group meeting in Helsinki in 2005.

Below is a comparison of the 2002 and 2007 Economic Census product lines for banking. Because of the change in concept and reuse of some product line numbers, the presentation is less clear-cut than the presentation for retail trade. The comparison is preliminary and subject to change but is reflective of the changes anticipated in this area based on the cooperative work of Census, BEA, and BLS.
